She Kept Mum On Atom Bomb

Widow, Aide to Gen. Groves, Knew All About It, but Never Peeped.

NEW YORK. — Jean Marley O'Leary, a former Teaneck, N.J., housewife, kept the world's most important secret from September, 1942, until August 5, 1945, thus proving that a woman can keep her mouth closed. From the beginning of experimentation until the explosion at Hiroshima, Mrs. O'Leary was in on the secret of the atomic bomb. She was—and is—the administrative assistant to Maj. Gen. Leslie R. Groves, who headed the army's two billion dollar Manhattan project.

"I was too terrified to open my mouth," the attractive young brunette says. "There was too much at stake for anyone to make a slip like that. Besides, I think women can keep a secret just as well and probably better than men can—if there seems to be a good reason for it."

Shown in Movie.

Mrs. O'Leary is fascinated and somewhat amused to see herself portrayed in a documentary film on development of the atomic bomb, "The Beginning or the End."

"I am Audrey Totter," Mrs. O'Leary said rather complacently. "And my love interest is Robert Walker. He is a young scientist who is an assistant to General Groves—actually the character is a composite of about four people.

"But" — Mrs. O'Leary became very positive—"that is part of the film that is definitely not documentary, unfortunately. We were all too busy, working all hours of the days and nights. The picture people just had to weave a little imaginary stuff into the picture to give it a love interest."

Generally speaking, Widow O'Leary is quite happy about the film "Jean O'Leary," and came to New York to purchase a super evening gown for the premiere of the picture in Washington February 20.

"I'd visited all the atomic installations from Oak Ridge to Los Alamos," she said. "I'd read a perfectly terrifying document, written by a scientist, on what we were trying to do. Then came our biggest moment: the test on July 15, 1945, and I was as nervous as a cat."

Gives a Party.

A few days before the test, Mrs. O'Leary invited 47 persons to a post-experiment party at her Arlington, Va., apartment.

"We didn't know whether it was going to be a celebration or a wake," she said, "and at the party there were only three persons who knew that it was a celebration of any sort."

After Hiroshima she sent her 13-year-old daughter some clippings on the atomic bombs. Young Connie wrote her mother a reproachful letter, stating firmly that she was very hurt because her mother had not even confided the momentous secret to her only child.

Maj. Gen. Thomas F. Farrell as official observer sent the pre-arranged code message on the Hiroshima explosion to the war department—"care of O'Leary." She still has the envelope, although the message has been included in the war department archives.

HEALTH HINTS for LIVESTOCK
PREPARED BY AMERICAN FOUNDATION FOR ANIMAL HEALTH

ANIMAL DISEASES HARD TO IDENTIFY

Too often we are inclined to think that all animal diseases run true to the form described in books and bulletins. Unfortunately, it takes more than a check-list of symptoms to identify the many confusing and complicated ailments of livestock and poultry.

These symptoms of depression . . . indicate several different diseases.

Any experienced veterinarian will agree that the so-called "atypical" or "untrue-to-form" cases occur constantly in almost every infectious or contagious disease of livestock.

Hog cholera, for example, sometimes so closely resembles other blood infections as to appear identical. Swine pox and acne are both skin diseases, and may look alike to the owner. "Flu" of swine can easily be confused with certain nutritional deficiencies or infectious pneumonias.

Anthrax, blackleg and malignant oedema of animals are all caused by spore-forming germs, and both the symptoms and postmortem findings may be easily confused.

The list of "look-alike" diseases is endless, and the chance for error in identifying the trouble is so great that an owner using "guess-work" may be risking serious losses in mistaking one disease for another. In any of these confusing diseases the best policy is to get an accurate diagnosis by a trained veterinarian.

In many cases, even the veterinarian has to draw samples for laboratory tests before a positive diagnosis of the specific and true cause of the disease is possible. It men with years of science behind them have to resort to laboratory checks to be sure, certainly the ordinary person cannot be expected to tell such disease just by looking at the animals.

COLLINS - WILLIAMS

The marriage of Miss Ann Williams, daughter of Mrs. Roland T. Williams and the late Mr. Williams of Malone, Florida and Vincent William Collins, Lieutenant, United States Navy, of Jacksonville, Florida, son of Mr. and Mrs. T. B. Collins, Norfolk, Virginia, took place on Saturday afternoon April 5, 1947, at the At Saints' Chapel at the Naval Air Station in Jacksonville. The ceremony was performed by the Chaplain, Captain Francis Lee Alberts, against a background of white gladiolus, stock and calla lillies interspersed with burning white tapers. A program of wedding music was presented by Williams Anderson, organist, who accompanied Edward Spanley, soloist, who sang "Because" by D'Hardelot.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the Officers Club, after which Lieutenant and Mrs. Collins left for a wedding trip to points in Virginia. They will make their home in Jacksonville.

CLAPP - JOHNSTON

Rev. Paul Forsythe performed the double ring ceremony. The couple will live in Richmond.

Peacetime Use for Rocket Considered

Research Engineer Turning Up Interesting Ideas.

SEATTLE. — Once more Americans will see a familiar sight—a rocket's red glare.

This time, however, according to Willy Ley, rocket expert and research engineer for Washington Institute of Technology, it will be put to peacetime uses.

Chimney sweeps, mountain climbers, fishermen — whose pursuits were little altered by industrial revolution—will find even they can't escape the coming rocket revolution.

Improved methods of rocket manufacture and dropping costs have made unlimited postwar uses feasible.

Ley suggested reaming factory chimneys, emergency safety lines strung by slipping Alpinists, and even surf casting up to 1,000 feet by reclining, weak-armed fishermen—all by rocket.

Already it is recorded that Swiss engineers have used rockets to string wires over mountains, break up hail storms and deliver mail.

The day is near when mail between London and New York may be delivered by rocket, Ley thinks. Automobiles by a reversed rocket action may be braked instantly on icy hills.

Ley promises aids to the skier. With rope attached to a rocket gun, he will be able to snake a line to the crest of the slope he just descended and thus pull himself up. Then there's stump-pulling — maybe. Or hot lunches dispatched to isolated ranchers or rangers.

American experiments with rockets for peacetime use have included trials in braking aircraft landing in restricted spaces, boosting motorless gliders in the air and improved life-saving, line-carrying rockets.

Other uses that suggest themselves are bridging chasms, fire fighting, foamite-loaded rockets and possibly—hunting. A leashed rocket with harpoon-like head may bring down ducks, eliminating retrievers.

Truman pledges aid to nations seeking peace.
